

Keynote Speaker: Gerald MacLean

Ottoman Things in Early Modern England

During the reigns of Henry VIII, Elizabeth I, and James VI and I, English culture was shaped by the arrival of various "Ottoman things" that were variously imported, appropriated, and sometimes fully naturalised into "English things". Turkey-made carpets in particular came to serve as a potent sign of wealth, cultivation, prestige and international eminence. What happens when Habsburg and English delegates are represented signing a peace agreement across an Ottoman carpet in August 1604? Gerald MacLean will examine the famous painting of the Somerset House Assembly of August 1604 and suggest that the fine small-pattern Holbein across which the delegates meet serves to assert England's deeply rooted and politically significant association with the mighty Ottoman Empire in order to snub the Spanish.
